Turning Life into Fiction: Looking Back at the Roads Taken

Carmela Martino, Children's Author

Writers often base their stories on actual people, places and events. But translating real life into compelling fiction can be a challenge—it often requires letting go of "what really happened" in favor of what best serves the story. The presenter will describe some of the steps in this process. Using examples from her own work, she will show how authors create composite characters, research setting details, and even cope with painful memories. She will also share techniques she uses with students to help them transform their life experiences into fascinating fiction. Ms. Martino will be available to sign books which can be purchased before and after the session.

Pop Culture and Information Literacy—A Natural Fit for Teens

Linda D. Behen, Director of Library Services, St. Ursula Academy, Cincinnati, OH

TV, movies, music, and technology are what interest teens. Why not use what they love to engage them in the library or classroom? This program demonstrates how pop culture can be used to gain students' attention and to create information literacy instruction that students will learn and remember.

Reading as a Subversive Act: Libraries As the Gateway to Liberation

Father Cyprian Davis, O.S.B., St. Meinrad School of Theology, St. Meinrad, IN

Prolific author and authority on the history and spirituality of African American Catholics in the U.S., Father Cyprian will discuss such facts as slaves in the US being forbidden to read, and that there was a stiff penalty for teaching slaves to read. Books opened the way to freedom; before the Civil Rights Act many libraries were inaccessible to blacks. Father Cyprian will cite the pre-Civil War library opened for members of the black Catholic Mutual Benefit Society (Baltimore Society of the Holy Family), and the library of the Sisters of the Holy Family in New Orleans.

Catholic Fiction and the College Student: The History and Practice of Reader Advisory at a Catholic College or University

Mary A. Kelleher, Periodicals and Reference Librarian, University of St. Thomas, Houston, TX

Beginning with an historical overview of reader advisory to students at a Catholic college or university through examination of professional literature and archival material, the presentation will also address promotion of Catholic fiction in an era when everyone, students and faculty alike, seems too busy for leisure reading. Sticky questions such as being authoritative without seeming authoritarian and addressing controversies concerning doctrinal issues will be discussed. The presentation will incorporate results of a semester's efforts in promoting Catholic fiction to university students. Highlights from a blog on Catholic fiction sponsored by the university library will be included.

Writing for the Spiritual Lives of Our Children

Sandy Eisenberg Sasso, Rabbi and Children's Author

Children come to us with an innate spirituality. What they don't have is the language to express it. Spiritual writing for children can give them that language, the tools to reflect and explore their spiritual experience. Journey to the places of our children's spirit and learn how stories can nurture their religious imagination. Rabbi Sasso will be available to sign books which can be purchased before and after the session.

Catholic High School Libraries at the Crossroads: The Divine Child High School Model

Panel from Divine Child High School, Dearborn, MI:

Serge Danielson-Francois, Librarian; Monsignor Herman Kucyk, Pastor Emeritus; Sister Aquila Omichinski, Assistant Librarian; Damian Hermann, Assistant Principal

One response to the financial challenges facing Catholic high school libraries is to re-image the space, resources and services available to faculty and students. At Divine Child High School, the librarians and staff have embraced the cost savings and productivity gains which technology makes possible without sacrificing the long-standing commitment to promoting intellectual curiosity, shared and disciplined inquiry and, above all, academic integrity.

The Catholic Research Resources Alliance: Building a Portal for Catholic Scholars

Eric Lease Morgan, Head of Digital Access and Information Architecture, University Libraries of Notre Dame; Alan Krieger, Theology/Philosophy Librarian, University Libraries of Notre Dame

This presentation describes, illustrates and demonstrates the purpose, scope and functionality of the Catholic Research Resources Alliance (CRRA) – a portal created for making more accessible rare, unique or infrequently held materials in academic libraries' and seminaries' special collections and archives. More specifically, participants will learn about the goals of the CRRA, the methods it is using to achieve these goals, and the technology used to implement them. This includes extensive collaboration between a number of institutions and the use of EAD/XML and Web Services computing techniques.

How to Add a Million Books to Your School Library

Sarah Jane Batt, Moderator and Panel TBA

Funded by a bequest to the Library Fund at the Indianapolis Foundation, many private schools in Indianapolis banded together to form a Shared System through the Indianapolis-Marion County Public Library. All six Catholic high schools and seven center city Catholic elementary schools now benefit from being part of the automated circulation system, and from the ability to borrow materials from each other, the public library, and other members of the Shared System.

Toward Total Literacy: Libraries, Learning and Living
Marianne Ryan, Associate Dean for Learning, Purdue University Libraries, West Lafayette, IN

Information literacy is the term commonly used to describe the library's goal of helping students find, evaluate, organize, and apply information for success; but often these efforts focus on the academic. Total literacy, enabling the individual to think critically, solve problems, and apply information for family functionality, workplace success, good citizenship, and other societal contributions is essential. This program will explore strategies that academic libraries can use to enhance learning experiences to meet students' information needs for life. It will also examine some of the factors that impact student learning. Finally, it will provide an opportunity for dialog and discussion.

Book Discussion Groups: Read and Discuss Our Second CLA Convention Book, The Life You Save May Be Your Own: An American Pilgrimage by Paul Elie

Jack Edson, Director, Hamburg (NY) Public Library

Participants are asked to read The Life You Save May be Your Own. This book, about four American Catholic writers—Thomas Merton, Dorothy Day, Walker Percy and Flannery O'Connor—and their unusual lives, is a story of how the Catholic faith took on forms the faithful could not have anticipated. Jack Edson, an experienced moderator of book discussion groups, will lead the discussion as well as provide tips you can use in your own library settings.

2:00 – 3:15 PM

The Catholic Archives of America: Impossible Dream?*
William Kevin Cawley, Senior Archivist, Hesburgh Library, Notre Dame, IN

In the 1870s James Farnham Edwards, an early librarian at Notre Dame, had an ambition to create a central repository of historical records for the Catholic Church in the United States. He called his enterprise the Catholic Archives of America. He managed to build an excellent research collection, with the cooperation of many American bishops, and after his death others carried on the work. But in reality no collection deserves to be called the Catholic Archives of America. The speaker will describe Edwards' efforts, show how he fell short of what he hoped to accomplish, and ask if, in the twenty-first century, we can hope to create by networking computers, something that can be accurately called the Catholic Archives of America.

Tours

Indianapolis and Indiana considers itself the Crossroads of America, as many major north/south and east/west routes cut through the city. Located in the center of the state, the city has created a vibrant downtown entertainment and cultural center. With the exception of the new Central Library of the Indianapolis and Marion County Public Library, all attractions are less than ½ mile from the CLA Convention Hotel! Bus tours will be arranged to take participants to the Indianapolis Museum of Art built on one of the Lilly estates – the historic home is open to the public. Admission to the IMA and Lilly Home is free. Tours will be offered to Quilts Plus for interested quilters. Other tours being explored, and the distance from the CLA hotel are:

- Indiana State Capital (0.1 mile)
- Indiana State Library (0.2 mile)
- Central Library, Indianapolis Marion County Public Library – renovation and addition completed December 2007 (1.16 mi.)
- Eiteljorg Museum of American Indians and Western Art (0.4 mi.)
- Indiana State Museum (0.4 mi.)
- National Collegiate Athletic Association [NCAA] Hall of Champions (0.5 mi.)
- White River State Park – home of the Indianapolis Zoo (0.56 mi.)
